Patrick Maisonneuve obtained a degree in Engineering at the National Institute of Applied Sciences in Lyon (France) in 1985, and successively specialized in Epidemiology and Biostatistics.

From 1986 until 1991, he worked at the International Agency for Research on Cancer (IARC) in Lyon, in the Divisions of Descriptive and then Analytical Epidemiology where he was involved in protocol development, in the management and analysis of many large-scale multi-centric case-control studies aimed to study the etiology of cancer at various sites.

Since 1991, he has worked in Milan (Italy) at the European Institute of Oncology, a comprehensive cancer center where he is currently Director of the Clinical Epidemiology Unit.

He developed multiple expertise in the field of epidemiology and clinical research, from the assessment of disease's risk factors, identification of individuals at high risk of disease, primary and secondary prevention, prognosis, and long-term outcome of cancer. He has also been involved in the design, conduct, analysis and reporting of institutional and multicentric observational studies and clinical trials, and of cancer screening programs.

He is the author or coauthor of numerous book chapters and of more than 580 scientific publications in peer-reviewed journals (Scopus h-index 115).
